1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the photochemistry of toluenes. The method employs a "dipolarophile" for the determination of toluene in an aqueous solution using the reaction of the dipolarophile with a reactive toluene to form a volatile toluene derivative, such as an aldehyde. 2. Description of the Prior Art An important component in environmental toxicology is the determination of levels of certain organics, especially, toluene. Various analytical methods are available for the detection of toluene in water or air. The most prevalent method of analysis is gas chromatography. However, gas chromatography has many shortcomings, the most important of which is high cost and complexity. Since the 1970's, the determination of toluene has been achieved by exploiting its ability to absorb ultraviolet radiation. This has been utilized in many diverse techniques, including fluorescence detectors, high pressure liquid chromatography, and even gas chromatography. All of these techniques require specially adapted equipment. Reaction of toluene with a reactive species is known in the art, as is application to the detection of toluene. See, for example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,957,959 which teaches the use of compounds which add to the toluene molecule as a basis for the determination of toluene in air. Also, it is known that the presence of an electron withdrawing group on a toluene molecule will cause the toluene to absorb ultraviolet light. In this regard, U.S. Pat. No. 3,957,959 teaches the use of dimethyl sulfide as a "dipolarophile" to react with a toluene molecule in an aqueous solution. In addition, the lachrymatory action of chlorine derivatives on aromatic molecules is well known. However, it has also been determined that diazo compounds can react with aromatic molecules to form aromatic aldehydes. This reaction is known as the Reissert reaction. A review of this reaction is set forth in J. Am. Chem. Soc. (1957), 85, 6185-6193. The present invention is based upon the discovery that the reaction of a dipolarophile with a reactive toluene molecule to form a dipolar derivative of the reactive toluene, followed by the reaction of the dipolar derivative with an aldehyde or a ketone to form
